Cyber Incident Exercising

Is your business prepared in the event of a crisis?

Preparing your organisation

Regulators are increasingly treating inadequate cybersecurity preparedness as a compliance failure, potentially resulting in punitive sanctions for responsible individuals.

Effective crisis management goes beyond damage control. The fastest recovery creates a significant competitive edge. Proactive scenario testing with plausible cyberattacks helps identify vulnerabilities and builds “corporate muscle memory” for a swift response. Leaders who prepare through crisis planning gain a decision-making advantage. By pre-determining responses to 80% of potential issues, they can navigate real-world crises with greater clarity and confidence.

Effective risk mitigation requires organisations to understand which threats are most likely to impact them. In a recent study* it was found that 43% of business leaders think cyber attacks will materially affect their organisations in the next 2 years.

Transition from reaction to resilience

Cyberattacks are an ever-present threat, and no organisation operates in isolation. The security of supply chains are only as strong as its weakest link. A single compromised entity can disrupt the entire chain, as evidenced by numerous cases of attacks cascading through interconnected businesses. To mitigate this risk, a robust crisis management framework is essential. This framework should not only identify critical assets within your own organisation but also map dependencies on key third-party vendors.

IDENTIFY

Determine what is important to the business and why.

ASSESS

Consider what motivates the threat actors and what are their likely attack.

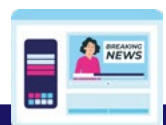

PLAN

Plan a response to each scenario likely to cause the greatest financial, reputational and regulatory impact.

TRAIN

Communicate, educate and assign roles to responsible and accountable parties in a crisis.

EXERCISE

Rehearse the organisational response at unit, functional and executive levels.
